Hi Lauren - can you help find 30 mins this week or next week for Annie, Aidan, Anthony, Bob, and Bryan? I'd love to join as well, if possible.

Hi Charlie,
Sorry that it took awhile to get back to you but Annie Wu offered to do the walk thru. Based on her schedule, could we set something up for later this week or early next? Would that work for the group?
Thanks,
Niki

Hi Niki-

Do you think someone on your team could lead a 30 min walkthrough with Aidan, Anthony, Bob D and Bryan, and myself on this topic in the next week or so? I think Bob D will be keen to know this as well, especially a 2 min overview of the Merchant feed set-up and 4-5 mins on DAB set-up.

- Lauren Knapp could help cal - I can loop her in
- to extent possible, let's review go-forward workflows (as opposed to ones that are about to change)...even if that means viewing mocks
- I can cover the sales bit upfront, and Aitan covered the back-end bit in his email, so that just leaves the middle bits

Let me know when you get a chance.

Thanks

Charlie

hi guys -

probably worthwhile for charlie or delegate to take you through the full thing, but here's a quick view to mull over the weekend :) ...

advertisers place a remarketing tag on every page of their site. that tag contains KV custom parameters including product ID. a user visits the site and the tag fires. the cookie is added onto a remarketing list, and associated with the cookie is the product ID. That same user later visits an adsense/adx page, where the ad request fires and goes to GDN/adwords. The GDN auction recognizes the user's cookie, see's the cookie is on the list and the corresponding ad from the advertiser participates in the auction. If it's the highest bidding ad, it wins the auction and the ad serves. The ad uses a dynamic creative via DAB (display ad builder). At the point of serving, the system looks up the cookie and sees the product ID they viewed on the advertiser site. Looks up the prodID in the google merchant center feed and retrieves from there the image of the product, it's name and price and displays those in the creative.

The ads are regular ads in adwords. Set up a campaign targeting the RMKT list with a dynamic creative as associated feed.

There are many optimizations and best practices that advertisers employ to improve performance. We also have sophisticated bidding algorithms that automatically adjust bids up and down in real time on a variety of signals, some specific to remarketing (eg we detect the user is seeing the ad w/in the first few mins/hours of leaving the advertiser site and raise bid).

The LCS sales team pitches, and folks in gtech help the client in tag deployment and campaign setup when needed.

Hi Charlie,

In talking with Anthony earlier today, it became clear that we don't know enough about the full sales & technical process behind the selling and delivery of a Dynamic Remarketing campaign. i.e. (for an average campaign):

- who does the pre-sales work with the advertiser and what does the high-level pitch look like?
- how does the campaign get booked?
- how does the advertiser create the user list and keep it updated?
- how do users on the list get 'found' in our network? (this is probably the most critical piece for us to get to grips with, and may be more of a technical/back-end question)
- are there in-campaign optimizations or analyses done to refine our ability to match advertiser performance expectations?

Would you or one of the RPEs be able to perform a walk-through of the process for us, as soon as practical?

Regards

Google

Improve ROI of all your online campaigns

Maximize the return on investment of every online campaign by complementing your campaigns with remarketing

Drive traffic to your site with search and other display campaigns, then win customers back with remarketing

Google Confidential and Proprietary

Remarketing works by helping you advertise to people who've visited your website, by showing them ads on the web after they've left

This may mean turning customers who've abandoned your shopping cart into converters

It may mean offering your loyal customers discounts

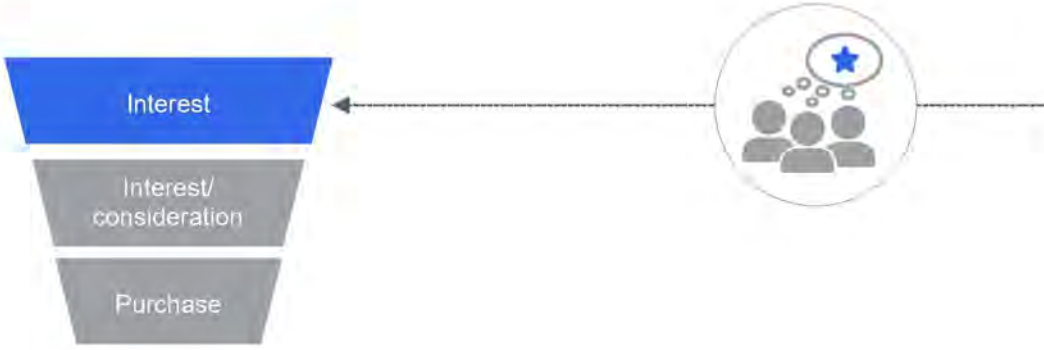

Or it may mean cross-selling related products, i.e. someone who buys diapers from you, may also be interested in baby food

Your imagination is the limit

Why remarketing works for upper funnel goals

- Drive brand awareness with tailored ads
- Continue the conversation with your strongest prospects
- Achieve massive global reach with the Google Display Network

The diagram illustrates the upper funnel of a marketing process. It features a funnel with three stages: 'Interest' (top, blue), 'Interest/consideration' (middle, grey), and 'Purchase' (bottom, grey). To the right of the funnel is a circular icon containing a group of people and a star, representing a target audience. A dashed arrow points from this icon to the 'Interest' stage of the funnel.

Why remarketing works for mid-funnel goals

- Maximize your investment in search by incorporating display into your campaigns
- Follow up with consumers interested in your product, across the web
- Drive them back to your site with tailored messages
- Achieve massive global reach with the Google Display Network

Why remarketing works for lower funnel goals

- Drive conversions with tailored ads
- Convert consumers who abandoned their shopping carts
- Achieve massive global reach with the Google Display Network

The diagram illustrates a marketing funnel with three stages: Interest, Interest/consideration, and Purchase. The Purchase stage is highlighted in yellow. A dashed arrow points from a money icon (a stack of bills with a dollar sign) to the Purchase stage, indicating the goal of driving conversions.
